

How Post-Sales Works at Concourse Today

Who we sell to

Enterprise finance departments at companies doing $500M+ in revenue, mostly non-tech. Our buyers are CFOs, and our users are FP&A, Treasury, and Accounting teams. Contracts are multi-million, so a single account matters a lot and losing one is expensive.

We don't sell software and leave. We position as an AI transformation partner, which means we put people alongside the technology.

The team on an account

Forward-deployed AI engineers. They sit with the customer, build agents against their actual data and systems, and own the technical implementation.

Founders. They often stay involved on live accounts, including on renewal and expansion.

The motion

POC. Typically 1-2 months. Success means converting the POC to an annual contract. POCs are meant to be a limited rollout focusing on one or a few workflows to show value. Paid pilot fee based on the number of workflows and the time commitment for our team associated with building it.

Implementation. FDEs run it alongside the customer's team. The work is building agents for real finance workflows, alongside configuration. We help to ensure that outputs are accurate and desirable.

Weekly cadence. Every live account gets a weekly meeting and a weekly deliverable, depending on how far along the POC is. This can include decks on new agents or workflows built, presentations to CFOs or IT teams, and ROI-showcases.

Documenting wins. We capture outcomes as we go: hours saved, accuracy, days off the close.
